

Encountering the Book of Psalms

A Literary and Theological Introduction

C. Hassell Bullock

 Baker Academic

A Division of Baker Book House Co
Grand Rapids, Michigan 49516

© 2001 by C. Hassell Bullock

Published by Baker Academic a division of Baker Book House Company
P.O. Box 6287, Grand Rapids, MI 49516-6287

Printed in the United States of America

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means—for example, electronic, photocopy, recording—without the prior written permission of the publisher. The only exception is brief quotations in printed reviews.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Bullock, C. Hassell.
Encountering the book of Psalms / C. Hassell Bullock.
p. cm. — (Encountering biblical studies)
Includes bibliographical references and index.
ISBN 0-8010-2245-2
1. Bible. O.T. Psalms—Criticism, interpretation, etc. I. Title. II. Series.
BS1430.2 .B85 2001
223'.206—dc21 2001035974

Unless otherwise noted, all Scripture quotations are taken from the HOLY BIBLE, NEW INTERNATIONAL VERSION®. NIV®. Copyright © 1973, 1978, 1984 by International Bible Society. Used by permission of Zondervan Publishing House. All rights reserved.

Scripture quotations marked RSV are taken from the Revised Standard Version of the Bible, copyright 1946, 1952, 1971 by the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the USA. Used by permission.

Scripture quotations marked NRSV are taken from the New Revised Standard Version of the Bible, copyright 1989 by the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the USA. Used by permission.

Illustration credits:

The illustration on page 31 (top) is taken from Klaus Seybold, Introducing the Psalms, trans. R. Graeme Dunphy (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark), 1990. Used by permission.

The illustrations on pages 31 (bottom), 32, 33, 40, 51, 70, 128, 138, 152, 153, 157, 168, 180, 184, 191, 193, 211, and 228 are taken from Othmar Keel, The Symbolism of the Biblical World: Ancient Near Eastern Iconography and the Book of Psalms, trans. Timothy J. Hallett (New York: Seabury, 1978). Used by permission.

The photographs on pages 89, 91, 108, 110, 113, 172, 192, 216, 219, and 234 were taken by Chris Miller.

For information about Baker Academic, visit our web site:
www.bakerbooks.com/academic

To the memory of
Rev. Britts E. and Mrs. Lucinda R. Nichols,
my father-in-law and mother-in-law,
who lived in the spirit of the Psalms.

“Blessed in the sight of the LORD is the death of his saints.”
Psalm 116:15

Contents in Brief

Editor's Preface	11
Publisher's Preface	12
To the Student	14
Author's Preface	15
Abbreviations	17

Part 1

Encountering the Literary and Hermeneutical Dimensions of the Psalms

1. "Begin the Music": Introducing the Psalms 21
2. Listening to the Symphony of Praise: Interpreting the Psalms 35
3. The Seams of the Garment of Praise: The Structure of the Book 57

Part 2

Encountering the Psalms as Worship and Historical Reflection

4. The Psalms in Worship and Faith 85
5. Encountering Theology and History in the Psalms 99

Part 3

Encountering the Psalms as Literary and Theological Types

6. "Praise the LORD, O My Soul; All My Inmost Being, Praise His Holy Name": The Psalms of Praise 121

7. "My God, My God, Why Have You Forsaken Me?": Psalms of Lament 135
8. "I Love the LORD, for He Heard My Voice; He Heard My Cry for Mercy": Psalms of Thanksgiving 151
9. "The LORD Is My Shepherd, I Shall Not Want": Psalms of Trust 165
10. "You Are My Son; Today I Have Become Your Father": Psalms of the Earthly King 177
11. "The LORD Reigns": Psalms of the Heavenly King 187
12. "My Mouth Will Speak Words of Wisdom": The Wisdom Psalms 199
13. "The Law of the LORD Is Perfect, Reviving the Soul": The Psalms of Torah 213
14. "May They Be Blotted Out of the Book of Life": The Imprecatory Psalms 227

Notes 239

Select Bibliography of the Psalms 245

Glossary 249

Subject Index 253

Scripture Index 257

Contents

Editor's Preface	11
Publisher's Preface	12
To the Student	14
Author's Preface	15
Abbreviations	17

Part 1

Encountering the Literary and Hermeneutical Dimensions of the Psalms

1. "Begin the Music":

Introducing the Psalms 21

Outline

Objectives

Names of the Book

Nature of the Book

Place of the Book in the Canon

David's Place in the Book

Titles of the Psalms and Special Terms

- Author Titles
- Historical Titles
- Titles of Literary or Musical Genre
- Titles with Musical Terms
- Titles with Musical Tunes

Musical Instruments

Singing

Study Questions

Key Terms

2. Listening to the Symphony of Praise: Interpreting the Psalms 35

Outline

Objectives

Scanning the Orchestra:

Hebrew Poetry

- Parallelism
 - Synonymous Parallelism
 - Antithetic Parallelism
- Strophe
- Chiastic Structure

Reading the Psalms

through the Psalmists' Experience

Reading the Psalms through the Editors' Experience

Reading the Psalms through the Readers' Experience

Reading the Psalms through the Apostles' Experience

- Typology
- Messianism

Reading the Psalms through the Literary Critics' Eyes

Reading the Psalms through the Students' Experience

- Principle 1: Determine Who Is Speaking
- Principle 2: Determine if the Psalm Is Personal or Corporate
- Principle 3: Determine for What Purpose the Psalm Was Written
- Principle 4: Determine the Emotional Orientation of the Psalm
- Principle 5: Determine the Genre of the Psalm if Possible
- Principle 6: Determine if There Is a Refrain or Recurring Words and Phrases

Study Questions

Key Terms

3. The Seams of the Garment of Praise: The Structure of the Book 57

Outline

Objectives

The Fivefold Division of the Psalter

The Editorial Seams of the Book: Books 1–3 (Pss 1–89)

- Book 1 (Pss 1–41)
- Book 2 (Pss 42–72)
- Book 3 (Pss 73–89)
- Summary

The Editorial Seams of the Book: Books 4–5 (Pss 90–150)

- Book 4 (Pss 90–106)
- Book 5 (Pss 107–50)
- Summary

The Final Shape of the Book: Psalms 1 and 146–50

- The Date of the Final Compilation of the Psalter

A Consideration of Authorship in the Shaping of the Book

- Authorship
- The Davidic Psalms
- The Korah Psalms (Pss 42–49; 84–85; 87–88)
- The Asaph Psalms (Pss 50; 73–83)
- Songs of Ascents (Pss 120–34)

Study Questions

Key Terms

Part 2

Encountering the Psalms as Worship and Historical Reflection

4. The Psalms in Worship and Faith 85

Outline

Objectives

The Psalms as an Expression of Shared Humanness

The Psalms as an Expression of Our Fragmentary Life

The Psalms as Preincarnational Revelation

The Psalms in the Qumran Scrolls

The Psalms in the New Testament

- The Psalms in the Gospels
- Paul's Use of the Psalms
- The Psalms in the Epistle to the Hebrews

- Summary
 - The Psalms in Temple Worship
 - The Psalms in Synagogue Worship
 - The Psalms in Christian Worship
 - The Church until the Reformation
 - The Psalms in the Reformation Church
 - The Psalms into the Twenty-First Century
 - Hiding the Psalms in One's Heart
 - Summary
 - Study Questions*
 - Key Terms*
- 5. Encountering Theology and History in the Psalms 99
- Outline*
 - Objectives*
 - Israel and Creation
 - The Patriarchs in Retrospect
 - The Exodus
 - Egyptian Bondage
 - Crossing of the Red Sea
 - Sinai
 - The Wilderness Conquest
 - Life in the Land
 - The Monarchy
 - The Exile and Return
 - Summary
 - Study Questions*
 - Key Terms*
- Part 3
- Encountering the Psalms as Literary and Theological Types
- 6. "Praise the LORD, O My Soul; All My Inmost Being, Praise His Holy Name": The Psalms of Praise 121
- Outline*
 - Objectives*
 - The Anatomy of Praise Form and Description of the Psalms of Praise
 - Major Themes of the Psalms of Praise
 - Creation
 - Creation by the Word of Command
 - Creation by Deed
 - Creation by Understanding
 - Creation by Power
 - The Beauty and the Language of Creation
 - Universality of God's Presence and Reign
 - God's Work in Israel's History
- Summary
- Study Questions*
- Key Terms*
- 7. "My God, My God, Why Have You Forsaken Me?": Psalms of Lament 135
- Outline*
 - Objectives*
 - Definition and Description of the Psalms of Lament
 - Subcategories of the Psalms of Lament
 - Identity of the Enemies/Evildoers in the Psalms
 - Summary
 - Study Questions*
 - Key Terms*
- 8. "I Love the LORD, for He Heard My Voice; He Heard My Cry for Mercy": Psalms of Thanksgiving 151
- Outline*
 - Objectives*
 - Description of Form and Content
 - Introduction
 - Report of Crisis
 - Deliverance as an Accomplished Fact
 - Conclusion
 - The Life Situation (Sitz im Leben) of the Psalms of Thanksgiving
 - Content of the Individual Psalms of Thanksgiving
 - Community Psalms of Thanksgiving
 - Theological Implications of the Psalms of Thanksgiving
 - Summary
 - Study Questions*
 - Key Terms*
- 9. "The LORD Is My Shepherd, I Shall Not Want": Psalms of Trust 165
- Outline*
 - Objectives*
 - Definition and Description of the Psalms of Trust
 - The Individual Psalms of Trust
 - Psalm 4
 - Psalm 16
 - Psalm 23
 - Psalm 27
 - Psalm 62
 - Psalm 73
 - The Community Psalms of Trust
 - Psalm 90
 - Psalm 115
 - Psalm 123
 - Psalm 124
 - Psalm 125
 - Psalm 126
 - Summary
 - Study Questions*
 - Key Terms*
- 10. "You Are My Son; Today I Have Become Your Father": Psalms of the Earthly King 177
- Outline*
 - Objectives*
 - Identifying the Royal Psalms
 - The Setting of the Royal Psalms
 - The Royal Psalms and the Messiah
 - Summary
 - Study Questions*
 - Key Terms*
- 11. "The LORD Reigns": Psalms of the Heavenly King 187
- Outline*
 - Objectives*
 - Description of Thematic Emphases
 - The Lord Is Sovereign in Righteousness and Justice
 - The Lord Is Sovereign in Creation
 - The Lord Is Sovereign in Judgment
 - The Lord Is the Sovereign King of the Future

The Messianic Overtones of the Kingship of Yahweh Psalms Dating the Kingship of Yahweh Psalms Summary Study Questions Key Terms 12. “My Mouth Will Speak Words of Wisdom”: The Wisdom Psalms 199 Outline Objectives Wisdom Psalms Definition and Description of Wisdom Psalms Identifying Wisdom Psalms Structure and Motif in the Wisdom Psalms Summary Study Questions Key Terms 13. “The Law of the LORD Is Perfect, Reviving the Soul”: The Psalms of Torah 213 Outline Objectives Description of the Torah Psalms and Definition of Torah <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Description of the Torah Psalms 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Definition of Torah • God’s Ways • God’s Works • God’s Words Torah Piety as the Spiritual Provenance of the Psalter <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Torah and Wisdom The Torah Psalms <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Psalm 1 • Psalm 19 • Psalm 119 <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ◦ Date of Composition of Psalm 119 ◦ A Profile of the Author of Psalm 119 ◦ The Torah Theology of Psalm 119 Psalm 119 and the Nature of Torah Psalm 119 and the Purpose of Torah Study Questions Key Terms 14. “May They Be Blotted Out of the Book of Life”: The Imprecatory Psalms 227 Outline Objectives The Imprecatory Psalms Defined The Problem The Solutions <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Nature of Poetry Itself 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Effective Magic • An Inferior Ethic • Prediction over Pronouncement • Messianic • Human Vindictiveness over Divine Instruction • Representative of Human Injustice • The Words of Others • National Rather than Personal • Distinction between the Sin and the Sinner Interpreting the Imprecatory Psalms as the Word of God <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Psalmist’s Theological Perspective • The “Curses” • Principles of Judgment Study Questions Key Terms Notes 239 Select Bibliography of the Psalms 245 Glossary 249 Subject Index 253 Scripture Index 257
--	--	--

Editor's Preface

The strength of the church and the vitality of the individual Christian's life are directly related to the role Scripture plays in them. Early believers knew the importance of this and spent their time in fellowship, prayer, and the study of God's Word. The passing of two thousand years has not changed the need, but it has changed the accessibility of many of the Bible's ideas. Time has distanced us from those days, and we often need guidance back into the world of the Old and New Testaments.

To that end Baker Book House is producing an innovative series of biblical textbooks. The design of this series is to put us back into the world of the biblical text, so that we may understand it as those early believers did and at the same time see it from and for our own day, thus facilitating the application of its truths to our contemporary situation.

Encountering Biblical Studies consists of undergraduate-level texts, and two surveys treating the Old and New Testaments provide the foundation for this series. Accompanying these survey texts are two collateral volumes of readings, which illuminate the world surrounding the biblical text. Built on these basic survey texts are upper-level college texts covering the books of the Bible that are most frequently offered in the curriculum of Christian colleges.

Complementing the series is a set of standard reference books that may be consulted for answers to specific questions or more in-depth study of biblical ideas. These reference books include Baker Commentary on the Bible, Baker Topical Guide to the Bible, Baker Encyclopedia of the Bible, Baker Theological Dictionary of the Bible, and Evangelical Dictionary of Theology.

The Encountering Biblical Studies series is written from an evangelical point of view, in the firm conviction that the Scripture is absolutely true and never misleads us. It is the sure foundation on which our faith and life may be built because it unerringly leads willing readers to Jesus Christ.

Walter A. Elwell
General Editor

Publisher's Preface

Bible courses must be considered the heart of the curriculum for Christian colleges and evangelical seminaries. For Christians the Bible constitutes the basis for both our spiritual and our intellectual lives—indeed for all of life. If these courses are fundamental to Christian education, then the textbooks used for these courses could not be more crucial.

Baker Book House is launching a series of volumes for college-level Bible courses. In this series, Baker will publish texts that are clearly college-level. The textbooks for the basic college survey courses and for the more advanced college courses on individual Bible books will not be written for laypeople or pastors and seminarians, nor will they be primarily reference books. Rather, they will be pedagogically oriented textbooks written with collegians in mind.

Encountering the Book of Psalms attempts to build on the basic survey text, Encountering the Old Testament: A Christian Survey (Bill T. Arnold and Bryan E. Beyer). While the survey text is written for college freshmen, this Psalms volume is intended for upper-level collegians.

Rather than providing a sustained exegetical analysis of each verse in the Book of Psalms, this volume surveys the entire book with an emphasis on drawing out its theological message and its practical significance for collegians. It consists of appropriate introduction and survey material with the necessary critical, historical, literary, hermeneutical, and background concerns woven within the exposition of the biblical text.

Guiding Principles

As part of the developing of this volume, the series editors, author, and publisher established the following principles:

1. It must reflect the finest in evangelical scholarship of our day.
2. It must be written at a level that most of today's upper-level collegians can understand.
3. It must be pedagogically sound. This extends not only to traditional concerns like study and review questions, chapter objectives and summaries for each chapter, but also the manner in which the material is presented.
4. It must include appropriate illustrative material such as photographs, maps, charts, graphs, figures, and sidebars.
5. It must seek to winsomely draw in the student by focusing on biblical teaching concerning crucial doctrinal and ethical matters.

Goals

The goals for Encountering the Book of Psalms fall into two categories: intellectual and attitudinal. The intellectual goals are to (1) present the factual content of the Book of Psalms, (2) introduce historical, geographical, and cultural background, (3) outline primary hermeneutical principles, (4) touch on critical issues (e.g., why some people read the Bible differently), and (5) substantiate the Christian faith.

The attitudinal goals are also fivefold: (1) to make the Bible a part of students' lives, (2) to instill in students a love for the Scriptures, (3) to make them better people, (4) to enhance their piety, and (5) to stimulate their love for God. In short, if this text builds a foundation for a lifetime of Bible study, the authors and publisher will be amply rewarded.

Overarching Themes

Controlling the writing of Encountering the Book of Psalms have been three essential theological themes: God, people, and the gospel as it relates to individuals. The notion that God is a person—one and three—and a transcendent and immanent Being has been woven throughout the text. Moreover, this God has created people in his image who are fallen but still the objects of his redemptive love. The gospel is the means, the active personal power that God uses to rescue people from darkness and death. But the gospel does more than rescue—it restores. It confers on otherwise hopeless sinners the resolve and strength to live lives that please God, because they walk in the love that comes from God.

Features

The publisher's aim has been to provide an exceptionally unique resource on the one hand but not to be merely trendy on the other. Some of the distinguishing features we hope will prove helpful to the professor and inspiring to the student include the following:

- liberal use of illustrations—photographs, figures, tables, charts
- sidebars and excursuses exploring exegetical, ethical, and theological issues of interest and concern to modern-day collegians
- chapter outline and objectives presented at the opening of each chapter
- study questions at the end of each chapter
- a helpful glossary
- a bibliography to guide further study

To the Student

Encountering the Book of Psalms in a systematic way for the first time is an exciting experience. It can also be overwhelming because there is so much to learn. You need to learn not only the content of this book of songs but also important background information about the world in which the songwriters lived.

The purpose of this textbook is to make that encounter a little less daunting. To accomplish this a number of learning aids have been incorporated into the text. We suggest you familiarize yourself with this textbook by reading the following introductory material, which explains what learning aids have been provided.

Sidebars

Sidebars isolate contemporary issues of concern and show how the Book of Psalms speaks to these pressing ethical and theological issues.

Chapter Outlines

At the beginning of each chapter is a brief outline of the chapter's contents. Study Suggestion: Before reading the chapter, take a few minutes to read the outline. Think of it as a road map, and remember that it is easier to reach your destination if you know where you are going.

Chapter Objectives

A brief list of objectives is placed at the outset of each chapter. These present the tasks you should be able to perform after reading the chapter. Study Suggestions: Read the objectives carefully before beginning to read the text. As you read the text, keep these objectives in mind and take notes to help you remember what you have read. After reading the chapter, return to the objectives and see if you can perform the tasks.

Key Terms and Glossary

Key terms have been identified throughout the text by the use of boldface type. This will alert you to important words or phrases you may not be familiar with. A definition of these words will be found at the end of the book in an alphabetical glossary. Study Suggestion: When you encounter a key term in the text, stop and read the definition before continuing through the chapter.

Study Questions

A few discussion questions have been provided at the end of each chapter, and these can be used to review for examinations. Study Suggestion: Write suitable answers to the study questions in preparation for tests.

Further Reading

A helpful bibliography for supplementary reading is presented at the end of the book. Study Suggestion: Use this list to explore areas of special interest.

Visual Aids

A host of illustrations have been included in this textbook. Each illustration has been carefully selected, and each is intended not only to make the text more aesthetically pleasing but also more easily mastered.

May your encounter of the Book of Psalms be an exciting adventure!

Author's Preface

No collection of poems has ever exercised as much influence on the Western world as the Book of Psalms. Even though Christianity has accepted the entire Old Testament as the authentic Word of God, none of its books has functioned so ecumenically as the Psalms. The Christian hermeneutic differs from the Jewish, admittedly, particularly in the Christian emphasis upon the messianic nature of the Psalms, but if Christian and Jew can meet and stand on level ground at all, they come closer to that stance when they approach the Psalms than with any other book of the Old Testament. If we Christians have, to our shame, imposed an inferiority complex on certain books of the Hebrew Bible, the Psalms have gratefully escaped this misfortune. The mystery of this phenomenon is in part the human element that pervades these spiritual poems. They are replete with evidences of the human situation with all its complexities. Wherever we are on the spectrum of human achievement or failure, we can find ourselves somewhere in this book. Wherever we are on the spectrum of human life, be it youth or full maturity or declining health or the throes of death, there is a niche in this book that provides reflection upon our condition.

There is another side to this mystery that lies in the pale of divine providence, beyond the domain of human reason. There God has empowered us for living and embellished our lives with a grace that exceeds our understanding. We draw upon this grace by grace, and by it are refurbished in life and reminded that, in the words of the Heidelberg Catechism, "I belong—body and soul, in life and in death—not to myself but to my faithful Savior, Jesus Christ." The Psalms infuse us with strength beyond our human powers because the God of the psalmists—and of us—hovers over them in love and mercy. They are his dwelling place, and there we meet him.

The Psalms are as difficult to interpret as any book of the Old Testament, perhaps even the New. Because there are so many human paths down which we may walk as we read the Psalms, the temptation is to assume that we can make our own paths and thus require the Psalms to authorize our ways. But the Psalms cannot mean all things to all people, despite their assorted thoughts and emotions. The historical element remains the control that draws a circle around the interpreter and restricts him or her within a method that does not permit a mere reader-response hermeneutic. Yet the Psalms will speak on levels of meaning that may be more a tributary than the mainstream of the text. "Even though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil" (Ps 23:4a) is probably a good illustration of this. Who would deny that this text has comforted millions in the hour of death, and who would deny its comfort yet to millions more! Historically speaking, it probably had a reference to some place and time in David's life before he faced the ultimate moment, when it seemed that an untimely death was approaching; but spiritually speaking, it says far more than that. Indeed, we can put our ultimate moment of life in light of this historical experience, whatever shape it took for David, and sense the Spirit hiding us under the Almighty's protecting wings.

If any book of the Bible requires every resource we have and can acquire to interpret it properly, the Psalms require no less and possibly more. We must have lived in the hamlets of human existence before the Psalms can speak to us in all their power. If we could combine resplendent words, profound emotions, and heavenly music into a single language, then we could begin to hear the Psalms in their richness and perhaps begin to expound them with some degree of adequacy. That will always be our aim.

To take my cue from the Psalms and express my gratitude to all of those who have contributed to the various dimensions of this book, I say:

I am under vows to you, O God;
I will present my thank offerings to you. (Ps 56:12)

So as I present them to God, I do it as a public offering of gratitude. They are not in order of ascending or descending gratefulness, for genuine gratitude is a virtue of equal quality wherever it is found, even though its quantity may range up and down the scale. My "thank offerings" go to the board of trustees of Wheaton College, who gave me a sabbatical to work on this manuscript at Tyndale House in Cambridge, England, in the fall of 1999; to the staff of Tyndale House, who made my work there one of the great study pleasures of my life; to my wife Rhonda, who shared the experience with me, and who loves the Psalms as I do; to the Parkview Presbyterian Church of Oak Park, which gave me time away from my pastoral duties to concentrate on my sabbatical project; to the Rev. Loy Mershimer, who responsibly and capably assumed those duties on my behalf and just as capably prepared the key terms and study questions for the book; to the Aldeen Fund of Wheaton College, which underwrote some of the bibliographical work of this writing project; to the Franklin S. Dyrness Chair at Wheaton College, in which I sit with honor and gratitude, and to the memory of the revered servant of Christ for whom it is named; to my friend and faithful bibliographer, Don Patrick, who did all of the bibliographical footwork for this book, and did it with enthusiasm and passion; to the Rev. James Scott, friend and former student, who read several chapters of the manuscript and offered his perceptive insights and suggestions; to Daniel Balint, my former teacher's assistant, called into service again, who read the manuscript with more than an editor's eye and assisted in constructing the sidebars; to my daughter, Becky, who prepared the bibliography for me; to Professor Eugene Merrill, the Old Testament editor of this series, who encouraged me in both the preliminary and the developing stages; to my colleague and the New Testament editor of this series, Professor Walter Elwell, whose encouragement has always been waiting for me down the hallway from my faculty office; to Baker Book House and former editor James Weaver, who makes his writers feel that writer and publisher are one and the same in purpose—to all of these I fulfill my vows before the gracious God of the Psalms and present to him my thank offering in the form of this manuscript. As John Calvin said of his own commentary on the Psalms, I would like also to say of this work:

If the reading of these my Commentaries confer as much benefit on the Church of God as I myself have reaped advantage from the composition of them, I shall have no reason to regret that I have undertaken this work.¹

And now I humbly dedicate this book to the memory of my father- and mother-in-law, Rev. Britts E. and Mrs. Lucinda R. Nichols, who lived their lives and served the church in the faith of the psalmists, trusting the God of this book until their triumphant transfer to glory. My father-in-law made his transfer on Palm Sunday of 1992 while we, in our church in Oak Park, Illinois, were acclaiming his Lord and ours with David's words, hundreds of miles away from his hospital room:

"Hosanna to the Son of David!"
"Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord!"

"Hosanna in the highest!" (Mt 21:9/Ps 118:26)

Surely his praise and ours united as he made his triumphal entry into the heavenly Jerusalem. My mother-in-law made hers in October of 1999 as

Rhonda and I recited Psalms 23 and 121 at her bedside. Their lives have touched mine in ways that have made the Psalms all the more meaningful. So in the words of the Jewish benediction, "May the memory of the righteous be for a blessing."

Abbreviations

Old Testament

Genesis	Gn
Exodus	Ex
Leviticus	Lv
Numbers	Nm
Deuteronomy	Dt
Joshua	Jos
Judges	Jgs
Ruth	Ru
1 Samuel	1 Sm
2 Samuel	2 Sm
1 Kings	1 Kgs
2 Kings	2 Kgs
1 Chronicles	1 Chr
2 Chronicles	2 Chr
Ezra	Ezr
Nehemiah	Neh
Esther	Est
Job	Jb
Psalms	Ps(s)
Proverbs	Prv
Ecclesiastes	Eccl

Song of Songs	Sg (Song)
Isaiah	Is
Jeremiah	Jer
Lamentations	Lam
Ezekiel	Ez
Daniel	Dn
Hosea	Hos
Joel	Jl
Amos	Am
Obadiah	Ob
Jonah	Jon
Micah	Mi
Nahum	Na
Habakkuk	Hb
Zephaniah	Zep
Haggai	Hg
Zechariah	Zec
Malachi	Mal

New Testament

Matthew	Mt
Mark	Mk
Luke	Lk
John	Jn

Acts of the Apostles	Acts
Romans	Rom
1 Corinthians	1 Cor
2 Corinthians	2 Cor
Galatians	Gal
Ephesians	Eph
Philippians	Phil
Colossians	Col
1 Thessalonians	1 Thes
2 Thessalonians	2 Thes
1 Timothy	1 Tm
2 Timothy	2 Tm
Titus	Ti
Philemon	Phlm
Hebrews	Heb
James	Jas
1 Peter	1 Pt
2 Peter	2 Pt
1 John	1 Jn
2 John	2 Jn
3 John	3 Jn
Jude	Jude
Revelation	Rv

Part 1

Encountering the Literary and Hermeneutical Dimensions of the Psalms

1

“Begin the Music”

Introducing the Psalms

Outline

- Names of the Book
- Nature of the Book
- Place of the Book in the Canon
- David’s Place in the Book
- Titles of the Psalms and Special Terms
 - Author Titles
 - Historical Titles
 - Titles of Literary or Musical Genre
 - Titles with Musical Terms
 - Titles with Musical Tunes
- Musical Instruments
- Singing

Objectives

After reading this chapter, you should be able to

1. Give the names of the Book of Psalms.
2. Discuss the nature of the book.
3. Summarize the place of the book in the Canon.
4. Assess David’s role in the composition of the Psalms.
5. Discuss the titles of the Psalms and other special terms.

Tehillimmizmor

On some religious festival the congregation of Israel waited expectantly in the sanctuary to begin their worship, summoned perhaps by the musician or a priest to “sing” and “begin the music”:

Sing for joy to God our strength;
shout aloud to the God of Jacob!
Begin the music, strike the tambourine, play the melodious harp and lyre.
Sound the ram’s horn at the New Moon,
and when the moon is full, on the day of our Feast;
this is a decree for Israel,
an ordinance of the God of Jacob. (Ps 81:1–4)

It is rare in the Bible to have such a vivid picture of worship with its musical accompaniments as we have here in Psalm 81. The musical setting sets the stage for the awesome sermon that follows in verses 6–16. It is a succinct summary of Israel’s history. In fact, one could cut this page out of Israel’s national journal and have a synopsis of God’s action that brought Israel into being (vv. 6–10), along with Israel’s unfortunate response (vv. 11–16).

The Book of Psalms is a record of God’s call and of his people’s response, enacted a thousand times in history. The Psalms are a photograph album of ancient Israel in its relationship to God and a mirror of our own relationship and reaction to God who summons his people and promises his presence and secures the future. Any time we try to interpret the Psalms, a journal of Israel’s life—so filled with joys and sorrows, inscribed with aspirations and failures—we will find ourselves experiencing a catharsis of the soul.

But before we imbibe deeply of the spiritual riches of the Psalms, we need to deal with some pedestrian matters that will orient us to our study.

Names of the Book

The Hebrew title of this book is appropriately Tehillim (“praises”), for praise is a central feature of the poems that comprise this collection. Yet interestingly, although this word in its singular form (tehillah “praise”) occurs many times in the psalms themselves, it only occurs once as a title to an individual psalm (Ps 145, “Praise of David”).

The major Greek versions rendered another Hebrew word, mizmor (“song”), found often in the titles of individual psalms, as psalmos, and they gave the book the title Psalmoi (“Psalms”). This was the title by which the New Testament writers knew the book (Lk 20:42; Acts 1:20). The common English title, of course, is “The Psalms,” and we readily see its derivation from the Greek versions.

Another popular English title, “Psalter,” comes from Alexandrinus, a fifth-century A.D. copy of the Greek translation known as the Septuagint, which called the book Psalterion, meaning “stringed instrument.”¹ The word actually occurs several times in the Greek text of the Psalms where it generally translates the Hebrew word kinnor (“lyre”), and sometimes nevel (“lyre”). Alexandrinus elevates this word to the title of the book.

Nature of the Book

The Book of Psalms is a diversified collection of sacred poems. Many of them are in fact prayers. While we shall not attempt a description of these poems at this point, the book is an anthology of prayers, worship songs, and poems sung and spoken in public and private worship. The psalmists spoke on their own behalf as well as Israel’s. All of the Psalms may not have been sung in the temple. While some were written for that purpose, others were written for private use and were subsequently adapted for public worship. The Book of Psalms then was not comparable to hymnbooks in our modern churches. Although it contained many of Israel’s temple hymns, they were not likely collected with that purpose in mind. Rather the book, whose composition spans several centuries, was a repository of public and private faith. It was more like the Book of Common Prayer than a hymnbook, even though it diverges sharply from both genres.

Writings

In the history of Israel and the Christian church the Psalms have had extensive use in both public and private worship,² which is very much a reflection of the original purpose of these sacred poems. John Calvin, one of the great commentators on the book, found the Psalms to be a guide for life. He remarked that “in considering the whole course of the life of David, it seemed to me that by his own footsteps he showed me the way, and from this I have experienced no small consolation.”³ Even when David took the wrong turn in the road, he showed us the way we ought not go and then the way to return to the main path (e.g., Ps 51). There is no book of the Bible that affords such spiritual catharsis as the Book of Psalms. Calvin acknowledges this when he calls the book “an anatomy of all parts of the soul.”⁴

Place of the Book in the Canon

The Book of Psalms is contained in the third division of the Hebrew Bible, the Writings, known in Greek as the Hagiographa. By their varied nature the Psalms belong in this section of the Hebrew Bible, since, in the strictest sense of the terms, they are neither Torah nor prophecy. They have, of course, elements of both of them. It is rather interesting that some commentators have seen a strong prophetic character in the Psalms. Perhaps that is because the psalmists are interpreters of Israel’s spiritual life. A prophetic strain runs through them. Calvin referred to the psalmists as prophets,⁵ and Brevard Childs, commenting on Psalms 89 and 132, recognized the prophetic model that came to characterize much of the Psalter: “To be sure, the psalmist has developed this tradition along different lines from the prophet, but increasingly the prophetic model poured its content into the idiom of the psalmist.”⁶

In fact, Childs recognized that the major thrust of the collection was prophetic in that the Psalms announced the Kingdom of God: “The Psalter in its canonical form, far from being different in kind from the prophetic message, joins with the prophets in announcing God’s coming kingship.”⁷ We might say that the Psalter was the repository of the prophetic spirit and the archive of the prophetic hope.

David’s Place in the Book

Modern scholarship has raised serious questions about David’s role in writing the Psalms. Some insist that he wrote all of the seventy-three psalms attributed to him, while others doubt that he wrote many, if any. Those who fall somewhere in between acknowledge that he could have written some of them, perhaps a significant number.

The Talmud attributes all of the Psalms to David.⁸ While only seventy-three psalms actually carry the notation that David was the poet, they do so in the larger setting of the poetic reputation that the Books of Samuel and Chronicles lay out for us. The writer of Samuel paints a portrait of David the musician, first as one who plays the lyre (kinnor) (1 Sm 16:14–23), and then as one who composes psalms. The writer of Samuel records David’s lament over Saul and Jonathan (2 Sm 1:17–27), a poem that has much in common with the laments of the Psalms. However, it is person specific, mentioning both Saul and Jonathan by name, whereas the psalmic laments are not so specific. This lament, according to the superscription, was written in the Book of Jashar, evidently an ancient collection of poetry. The one other reference to that book is the notation that Joshua's famous words upon his defeat of the Amorites (these are also poetry) were also included in it (Jos 10:12-13). The literary link between David's poetry outside the Psalms and the poetry within, however, is best represented by his song of praise "when the LORD delivered him from the hand of all his enemies and from the hand of Saul" (2 Sm 22), which is essentially a duplicate of Psalm 18. The other poetic composition attributed to David in Samuel is the Last Words of David recorded in 2 Samuel 23:1-7. Thus the psalmic associations with David are well attested in the Books of Samuel.

Written after the Judean kingdom had passed into history, the Books of Chronicles also take this information very seriously. Still in that late time, or, perhaps we should say, especially in that late period, David's musical legacy was lodged in the national memory. Thus David took his place alongside the priests as founder of the musical tradition of the temple. He assigned musical duties to the Levites (2 Chr 23:18; see Ezr 3:10), directed the manufacture of musical instruments for the temple (1 Chr 23:5; 2 Chr 7:6; 29:26), and designated the times when the Levites were to perform certain musical duties.

One might argue against Samuel and Chronicles about David's musical role in the temple and contend that it was the result of layers of tradition mounting up in David's column. Yet, his reputation was obviously an enormous one, and his portrait, painted with such careful and personal details in the Books of Samuel, was not likely an invention of Israel's imagination. Therefore, the general setting of David's life and long reign as laid out in Samuel and followed by the Chronicler gives a generous touch of realism to the strong association of David with the Book of Psalms.

Titles of the Psalms and Special Terms

In this section we will consider the special terms that occur in the Psalms, so that we may understand, as best our current knowledge will allow, the fuller dimensions of the book.

With the rise of form criticism, the study of the Psalms titles became a secondary matter, and the form critics generally assumed they were late and could be ignored as having any meaning in the interpretation of the Psalms. However, a more intentional effort has been made in recent years to understand the role of the titles in the study of the Psalms. Just when were the titles added to the Psalms? Were any of them original? What did the composer who prefixed the titles intend by them? Or how was the editor who added them trying to enhance the Psalms? These are difficult questions. While some of the titles, perhaps most, may have been added long after the composition of the Psalms, they nevertheless must not be viewed as a haphazard exercise.

But even though a logical connection has to be assumed between a given title and the psalm, it is often difficult for us to see. This is particularly noticeable in the historical titles. While pieces of the historical situation may be discernible, and certain verses may qualify as assessments or reflections of that experience, the connection may still not be obvious. As the centuries have passed and life has changed, the meaning of these titles has been lost. Even by the time of the Greek translation, the translators were often stumped by them and could only make a guess at their meaning. As research continues and the Psalms titles continue to be the object of serious study, perhaps we will eventually know much more about their meaning. Yet, unfortunately, the meaning of some of the terms may remain forever obscure.

Author Titles

The authorship question is a difficult one because we cannot be absolutely sure how to read some of the superscriptions in which individuals are mentioned, nor can we be sure that the titles were original to the psalm itself. One term is the simple preposition “to,” “by,” or “of” (Hebrew le). Archaeologists have identified this term on many jar handles found in Israel, where it designates the owner of the jar, “belonging to. . .” This is not quite the same as finding a poem with the same designation. In this latter context, it could mean “to,” in the sense of dedication to that individual, or “by,” carrying the nuance of authorship. Based upon the information of the Books of Samuel and Chronicles, I suggest that we understand the term in the authorial sense unless there are indications to the contrary, whether in the superscription or the content of the poem itself. This is the view of Calvin.⁹ This preposition is prefixed to the names of David, Solomon, Moses, Asaph, the sons of Korah, and the two Ezrahites. It is a bit difficult to ignore all of these associations and deny that any of them are authorial. At the same time, to put David in a category by himself and deny his compositional role, while allowing others, is hardly a defensible view either,¹⁰ even though we may admit that the titles of the Psalms are in many instances later than the original composition of the psalm.

Some scholars have resorted to a literary explanation of the term, asserting that “to/by/of David” is merely literary convention, designating a particular quality of poetry.¹¹ However, it is not easy to define precisely what that quality is. So this must remain a rather arbitrary theory.

As table 1.1 shows, many of the psalms have no names attached to them at all. The highest concentration of these (twenty-eight) are in Book 5 (Ps 107–50); but we should also note that Book 5 also contains fifteen Davidic psalms, which counterbalance the heavily Davidic Book 1 (Pss 1–41) with the final collection. Perhaps this concentration of anonymous psalms suggests that the activity of psalm writing had become quite broad and a practice of the common people. The names that appear in the headings are noteworthy individuals or groups in ancient Israel. We may assume that if the writer of a psalm had a recognizable name, he or the compiler might be more likely to attach it to his composition. Or if the public knew of the association of such a name with a particular psalm, it is more likely that it would have stuck to the psalm in the transmission process.

Historical Titles

Thirteen psalms have superscriptions that contain historical information: Psalms 3, 7, 18, 34, 51, 52, 54, 56, 57, 59, 60, 63, and 142. A look at table 1.2 will show that all of these psalms are Davidic and refer to some instance in or information about his life. But we might ask why other historical persons outside of the Davidic era are not mentioned in the Psalm titles.

While some interpreters of the Psalms handily dispose of these historical titles with a dismissive word, the Davidic association has a legitimizing effect on the psalms in which such a title appears. While acknowledging the paucity of information, Leslie McFall suggests that a superscription was put on a psalm as soon as it was composed. He points to Hezekiah’s psalm in Isaiah 38 and Habakkuk’s psalm in Habakkuk 3. Moreover, we have superscriptive notes for six compositions in the Book of Proverbs, which seem to be integral to those compositions (Prv 1:1; 10:1; 24:23; 25:1; 30:1; 31:1).¹²

Just how close in time to David’s life the historical titles were added to the psalms is not possible to tell, but they represent an effort to clothe the psalms in historical garb, that is, to add a touch of realism to them. That does not mean that they were con-

Table 1.1
Author Titles in the Psalms

	Bk 1 (1–41)	Bk 2 (42–72)	Bk 3 (73–89)	Bk 4 (90–106)	Bk 5 (107–50)
Moses				Ps 90
David	Pss 3–32 (taking 9 and 10 as a single psalm), 34–41	Pss 51–65, 68–71 (taking 70 and 71 as a single psalm)	Ps 86	Pss 101, 103	Pss 108–10, 122, 124, 131, 133, 138–45
Solomon		Ps 72			Ps 127
Asaph		Ps 50	Pss 73–83
Sons of Korah		Pss 42–49 (taking 42 and 43 as a single psalm)	Pss 84–85, 87–88 (both “sons of Korah” and “Heman” are noted in Ps 88)
Heman			Ps 88 (both “sons of Korah” and “Heman” are noted)
Ethan			Ps 89
Anonymous	Pss 1–2, 33	Pss 66–67		Pss 91–100, 102, 104–6	Pss 107, 111–21, 123, 125–26, 128–30, 132, 134–37, 146–50

shir

trived. In fact, the historical association may come from a personal connection between the poem and the author. In regard to the broad-ranging nature of these poems, Derek Kidner comments that “the nucleus of the psalm—some germinal phrase or sequence—which came to David in the crisis itself,” may be the idea he developed at a later time as he reflected upon the event or era.¹³

Titles of Literary or Musical Genre

Other titles fall into the literary or musical category and suggest some literary form or a musical notation. Unfortunately, certainty about the meaning of some of these terms can no longer be achieved, but we will discuss the more generally accepted understanding of them.

1. Song (shir). In the Book of Psalms, as would be expected, this term occurs in reference to songs rendered in the temple. However, it also had a secular usage (Prv 25:20; Eccl 7:5). It seems to suggest a vocal rather than an instrumental rendering. This word occurs in conjunction with other words. One such connection is with the Hebrew word mizmor (psalm). The difference between these two words may

Table 1.2
The Historical Titles of the Psalms and Their Historical Texts

Ps 3	Ps 7	Ps 18	Ps 34	Ps 51	Ps 52
A psalm of David. When he fled from his son Absalom. 2 Sm 15:13–31	A shiggaion of David, which he sang to the LORD concerning Cush, a Benjamite. 2 Sm 16 (Nothing is known of Cush, but David had enemies among the Benjamites. See 2 Sm 16:5–9; 20:1.)	For the director of music. Of David the servant of the LORD. He sang to the LORD the words of this song when the LORD delivered him from the hand of all his enemies and from the hand of Saul. He said: 2 Sm 22:1–51 (duplicate)	Of David. When he pretended to be insane before Abimelech, who drove him away, and he left. 1 Sm 21:10–14	For the director of music. A psalm of David. When the prophet Nathan came to him after David had committed adultery with Bathsheba. 2 Sm 11–12	For the director of music. A maskil of David. When Doeg the Edomite had gone to Saul and told him: “David has gone to the house of Ahimelech.” 1 Sm 22:6–23
Ps 54	Ps 56	Ps 57	Ps 59	Ps 60	Ps 63	Ps 142
For the director of music. With stringed instruments. A maskil of David. When the Ziphites had gone to Saul and said, “Is not David hiding among us?” 1 Sm 23:19; 26:1	For the director of music. To the tune of “A Dove on Distant Oaks.” Of David. A miktam . When the Philistines had seized him in Gath. 1 Sm 21:11–16	For the director of music. To the tune of “Do Not Destroy.” Of David. A miktam . When he had fled from Saul into the cave. 1 Sm 22:1	For the director of music. To the tune of “Do Not Destroy.” Of David. A miktam . When Saul had sent men to watch David’s house in order to kill him. 1 Sm 19:11–17	For the director of music. To the tune of “The Lily of the Covenant.” A miktam of David. For teaching. When he fought Aram Naharaim and Aram Zobah, and when Joab returned and struck down twelve thousand Edomites in the Valley of Salt. 2 Sm 8:13–14	A psalm of David. When he was in the Desert of Judah. 1 Sm 23:14; 24:1	A maskil of David. When he was in the cave. A prayer. 1 Sm 22:1; 24:1–7 be that “song” (shir) is vocal and “psalm” (mizmor) is accompanied by a musical instrument.¹⁴ When used together they would suggest accompanied singing. Another connection occurs as the headings for Psalms 120–34, and the phrase is usually translated “songs of ascents” (shir hamma’aloth). It is generally believed that these psalms were sung on special pilgrimages to Jerusalem. This may be suggested by the use of the verb “to go up” in Ezra 2:1 and a noun derived from the verb in Ezra 7:9, miktam

maskil

both describing the “going up” from the Babylonian exile. Later the term applied to the fifteen temple steps leading up to the temple proper, where the temple singers sang these psalms, one on each step. Some would, in fact, translate this phrase as “songs of the steps.”

2. Psalm (mizmor). As already stated, this word, used fifty-seven times as a technical term in the Psalter,¹⁵ suggests a musical form. As a verb it means to play a musical instrument. In fact, in four of its occurrences in the Psalms the musical instrument is specified (Pss 33:2; 98:5; 144:9; 147:7). Thus, the meaning of the noun is a poetic form intended for musical accompaniment. In the Septuagint (LXX) this word is normally rendered as psalmos, from which we get our word “psalm.”
3. Miktam. There is no consensus on the meaning of this term, so the translations usually render it in transliterated form as we have done here. It occurs in the titles of Psalms 16, 56, 57, 58, 59, and 60, which are all Davidic psalms. Some scholars have suggested that it is related to the Hebrew noun ketem (“gold”), and they would render its meaning as “a golden psalm.” But this view is not widely accepted. Sigmund Mowinckel connects it to the Akkadian verb katamu (“to cover”), associates it with atonement, and translates it “atonement psalm.”¹⁶ Hans-Joachim Kraus connects the LXX translation “pillar inscription” (stellographia) with the only occurrence of the verb ktm in Jeremiah 2:22, for which he suggests the meaning “to be indelible.” He hypothetically suggests that “stelographic publication” might make sense, especially in view of the LXX translation of the word miktam.¹⁷ B. D. Eerdmans offers an even more attractive interpretation, even though it too is hypothetical. He proposes that, in view of the perilous situation the titles of these psalms suggest, the word suggests the covering of the lips in secrecy. So “a silent prayer” might be the best translation, for David could not have prayed a prayer out loud in any of these situations.¹⁸

4. Maskil. This term too is generally transliterated because the opinions on its meaning vary widely. It occurs in the titles of thirteen psalms: Psalms 32, 42, 44, 45, 52, 53, 54, 55, 74, 78, 88, 89, and 142. The word also occurs in the text of Psalm 47:7. Commentators have rendered it “artistic song” or “didactic song” because it comes from the verb “to be wise or skilled.” If we are thinking in terms of the “didactic” poem, most of these psalms, with the exception of Psalms 32 and 78, do not fit into that category well. Kraus points to 2 Chronicles 30:22, which describes levitical activity with the participle of this root (skl) and submits that “presenting songs and poems in a skilled, intelligent, and artistic way has something to do with the explanation of” maskil.¹⁹ The Levites were evidently singing well-crafted songs. Perhaps that comes as close to the meaning of this term as we can get with our present knowledge of ancient Israelite poetry.
5. Shiggaion. This term occurs only once in the Psalms, in the heading of Psalm 7, but the plural form also occurs in the poem of Habakkuk (Hb 3:1). It comes from a verb which means “to err” or “wander,” but neither Psalm 7 nor Habakkuk 3 is a penitential psalm or strictly a lament. A. F. Kirkpatrick suggested that it has something to do with the ecstatic, passionate character of the poetry.²⁰ Kraus connects it to the Akkadian word segu (“lamentation”) and suggests “agitated lament.”²¹ We simply will have to wait for further information before we can speak confidently.

tefillah

lamenatstseakh

6. Tehillah (“song of praise”). Interestingly, this noun, which in its plural form came to be the Hebrew designation of the entire book of Psalms, occurs as a genre of psalm in Psalm 145, but elsewhere in the body of the Psalms it is used in the sense of “praise” (22:25; 33:1; 34:1; 40:3; 48:10; 65:1; 71:8; 100:4; 106:12, 47; 119:171; 147:1; 148:14; 149:1). In Nehemiah 12:46 this noun occurs in conjunction with “song” (“song of praise” = shir tehillah). In view of so many obscure terms, we can be grateful that the meaning of this one is so clear.
7. Tefillah (“prayer”). This noun appears in the titles of five psalms: Psalms 17, 86, 90, 102, and 142. It also occurs in Habakkuk 3:1 in the phrase “a prayer of Habakkuk the prophet.” It is the general term for prayer in the Psalms as well as in the Old Testament. As a term for genre, Kraus proposes that it applies to a prayer of lament or a bidding prayer.²²

Titles with Musical Terms

We can only wish we knew more about the music of ancient Israel than we do. The information we do have is rather laconic, but it is sufficient to inform us that music played a large role in ancient Israel and in the temple. The following musical terms occur in the Psalms.

1. Lamenatstseakh (“to the choirmaster”). This expression occurs in the title of fifty-five psalms and in Habakkuk 3:19. The verb from which this noun derives (natsakh) means “to lead,” “to excel,” or “to be at the head,” and is so used in Ezra 3:8; 1 Chronicles 23:4; and 2 Chronicles 2:2.²³ The verb occurs in a different Hebrew verbal stem (piel) in 1 Chronicles 15:21 in the sense of “to play the lyre.” John Alexander Lamb, basing his view on the Akkadian ritual texts, proposes that this term means “to be recited by the official in charge.”²⁴ Others have suggested that it was a special title for David, meaning “him who excels.”²⁵ The idea of the choirmaster, in the sense of the one who leads, is still a possibility and is just about as attractive as any of the other proposals.

2. Binginoth and ’al-neginoth. The first of these terms, binginoth, is made of the preposition “with” (b) and the noun neginoth, which may mean “stringed instruments” or “stringed accompaniment,” the latter indicating the manner of performance. The phrase occurs in the titles of Psalms 4, 6, 54, 55, 67, and 76, with the variant ’al-neginath (“on stringed instruments”) in Psalm 61. The verb from which it derives (ngn) means “to run over the strings.”²⁶ We can be pretty certain then that these psalms were to be recited or sung to the strains of stringed instruments.
3. ’al-hashminith (“according to the eighth”). This particular phrase, according to some, suggests that the instruments are tuned for the bass singers (“according to the eighth”). Kraus suggests that it refers not to the voice but to the instrument, “on the eight-stringed (instrument).”²⁷ It occurs in the titles of Psalms 6 and 12. The phrase also occurs in 1 Chronicles 15:21, where it is joined with the verb “to play a stringed instrument,” and the instrument is identified as the lyre. Therefore, it seems that the term is not the instrument itself but the range of voice.
4. ’al-muth, ’almuth labben, and ’al-alamoth. These three phrases are considered by some to be variants upon one meaning. They may be the counterpart to the preceding phrase, referring to the female range rather than the male.²⁸ The term ’al-alamoth occurs in the title of Psalm 46 and in 1 Chronicles 15:20, where it may mean “according to maidens.” A. S. Gordon proposes that these are the instruments tuned for the maid-ens, that is, in a soprano key.²⁹ The longer term 'almuth labben occurs in Psalm 9, and the shorter term 'almuth is found at the end of Psalm 48 (v. 14).

Titles with Musical Tunes

At this point we begin discussing a series of terms that are often interpreted as tune names.

1. 'al-gittith (“upon gittith”). Psalms 8, 81, and 84 carry this term in their titles. The Targum supposes this to be a musical instrument that originated in Gath. But gath also means winepress, and in the LXX the title is “according to the winepress” (hyper tōn lēnōn), suggesting a vintage song.³⁰
2. 'al-tashketh (“Do not destroy”). This clause occurs in the titles of Psalms 57, 58, 59, and 75, where it immediately follows the opening phrase, “to the choirmaster.” Some scholars have referenced Isaiah 65:8 where this expression occurs and seems to refer to a vintage song, and thus have seen it in the Psalms as an expression of a song tune.
3. 'al-ayyeleth ha-shachar (“on the hind of the dawn”). This phrase occurs only in the title of Psalm 22. If we are to understand it as a tune, then we should understand it in the sense of “set to the hind of the morning.”³¹
4. 'al-shoshannim and 'al-shushan eduth (“on the lilies” and “according to the lily of testimony”). Both are likely hymn tunes, the first occurring in Psalms 45 and 69, and the second in Psalm 60 (“according to the lily of the testimony”) and 80 (“to the lilies, a testimony”). The LXX interpreted the word shoshannim as “those who change.” L. Delekat basically agrees with this translation and refers these psalms to “those whose situation changes for the worse.”³² The word eduth (“testimony”) in the second phrase is as problematic as the first noun of the phrase. Perhaps it could refer to the oracle of

Psalm 60:6–8, but there is no such oracle in Psalm 80.³³ The best we can do is leave the matter on the idea that it is a hymn tune and not try to figure out the details, especially since we no longer have the tune and have no idea what kind of musical setting it provided for these psalms.

5. 'al-yonath 'elem rekhoqim (“set to the dove of the far-off terebinths”).³⁴ This expression occurs only in the title of Psalm 56, and our understanding is insufficient to inform us why this tune was applied to the psalm.

Musical Instruments

Ancient Near Eastern literature gives us quite a bit of information about the various musical instruments used during the Old Testament period. This is especially true of ancient art. Although we do not have any art forms from Israelite society, most likely because of the Old Testament’s opposition to images, this is not true of Israel’s neighbors, and musical instruments figure prominently among the cultural artifacts represented in this art. The Psalms mention a number of musical instruments, which we can classify in three groups: (1) percussions, (2) winds, and (3) strings.

Two percussion instruments are mentioned in the Psalms: the hand-drum or tambourine (Pss 81:2; 149:3; 150:4)³⁵ and cymbals (Ps 150:5; 1 Chr 13:8; 15:16–17). The tambourine (toph) was used in processions, especially at victory celebrations.³⁶ Psalm 68:24–25 describes a procession in the temple:

Your procession has come into view, O God,
the procession of my God and King into the sanctuary.
In front are the singers, after them the musicians;

The clay figure of a woman with a hand-drum or tambourine.

with them are the maidens playing tambourines.

Cymbals (tsiltselim)³⁷ were also used in Israelite worship. Archaeological discoveries from the Late Bronze and Early Iron Ages in Canaan give the impression that this instrument was used widely during that time.³⁸ Psalm 150 lists cymbals in the orchestra of praise: “Praise him with the clash of cymbals, / praise him with resounding cymbals” (v. 5). One cannot be certain about the difference between the “clash of cymbals” and the “resounding cymbals,” but perhaps the difference was in the method of performance rather than the instrument.

The second category of instruments is the wind instruments. Those mentioned in the Psalms are the horn (shofar; 47:5; 81:3; 98:6; 150:3), the trumpet (khatsoyserah), and the flute (ugav; Ps 150:4). The horn was likely the ram’s horn, which was used to announce important occasions (Ex 20:18; 2 Sm 15:10; 1 Kgs 1:34, 39, 41–42; 2 Kgs 9:13) and to sound alarms (Ps 81:3). By the nature of the instrument, however, it was not helpful for accompaniment.

The horn was used in the temple and was the only musical instrument that came to be used in the synagogue.

The trumpet seems to have been the favorite instrument of the Chronicler. He uses the noun nineteen times and the verb six times. It was probably of Egyptian origin and is attested in the art and literature of the middle of the third millennium B.C. onwards.³⁹ This instrument replaced the horn at the coronation of Solomon (971–931 B.C., 1 Kgs 1:34, 39, 41). It appears only once in the Psalms (98:6), where the people acclaim Yahweh as King with an orchestra and singing.

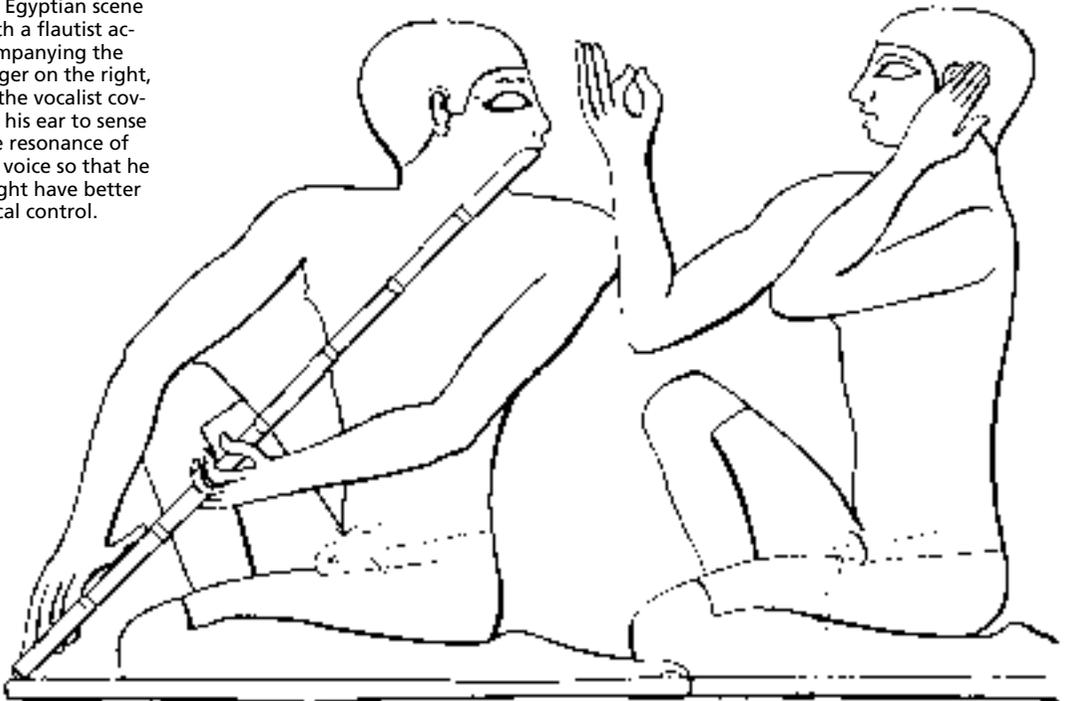

The third wind instrument mentioned in the Psalms, and mentioned only once, is the flute. Flutes made of bone are attested in Egypt as early as the fourth millennium B.C.⁴⁰ The double flute (halil), which had a brighter sound, is attested in Israel. The figure of the man playing the double flute indicates that it was rather short and as a result would have had higher tones than a longer instrument of its diameter and material. In the Old Testament this instrument was used by prophetic bands (1 Sm 10:5), played at festivals (Is 5:12), and played on joyful and festal occasions (1 Kgs 1:40; Is 30:29).⁴¹

The third group of instruments was the strings. They seem to have been a favorite accompaniment for singing. The Hebrew word kinnor occurs thirteen times in the Psalms, and nevel occurs eight, each probably representing a different type of lyre. Keel distinguishes between two kinds of lyres. One has a sounding-box shaped like a jar and a curved yoke, while the other has a rounded bottom with a simple sounding-board, and the yoke-arms are only curved slightly.⁴² Since the word nevel is also used of a large storage jar (Lam 4:2; Is 30:14), the suggestion is that the nevel designates the type of lyre with the jar sounding-box.⁴³ It would appear that the kinnor was more commonly used in ancient Israel (Ps 137:2).

Musicians playing the tambourine (left), two types of lyres, and the cymbals.

An Egyptian scene with a flautist accompanying the singer on the right, as the vocalist covers his ear to sense the resonance of his voice so that he might have better vocal control.

A lyre (nevel) with its sounding-box in the shape of a jar on a coin of the First Jewish Revolt (A.D. 66–70).

A lyre (kinnor) with a rounded sounding-box on a coin of the First Jewish Revolt (A.D. 66–70).

A large lyre (nevel) with a sounding-box in the shape of a jar.

From the pictures of the lyre in ancient art, the number of strings varied, but some lyres had as many as ten strings (Ps 144:9).

As the Psalms show, at times these instruments were played in concert together to accompany singing (2 Chr 5:12–13), while on other occasions the orchestra played to the chanting of praise to God (Ps 150).

These men, evidently captives, are playing the lyre (kinnor or nevel), an instrument known in Egypt as early as the second millennium B.C.—perhaps imported from Canaan.

Singing

The nature of singing in the tabernacle and temple is another difficult topic. In fact, it is probably not possible to speak generally because practices changed through the centuries of worship. There is evidence, however, that antiphonal singing was in vogue in early times. After David's slaying of Goliath, the women offered their popular support as they danced and "answered one another" (NIV has simply "sang"): "Saul has slain his thousands, / and David his tens of thousands" (1 Sm 18:7). The double subject would lend itself nicely to antiphonal singing. The refrain of Psalms 118:1-4 and 136 definitely anticipates an antiphonal style of recitation or singing, and Psalm 129 calls for a response as well (v. 1, "let Israel say").

The Psalter attests to the existence of singers in the temple (Pss 68:25; 87:7). Moreover, the witness of the Books of Chronicles to the musical activity in the temple, and particularly to singers, is not likely the Chronicler's

Key Terms

Tehillim
mizmor
 Writings
shir
miktam
maskil
tefillah
lamenatstseakh

invention. Obviously he knew personally about this great tradition, and he traces it back to the time of David (1 Chr 15:16; 2 Chr 35:15).

The Psalms inform us that the lyre and other instruments accompanied hymns of thanksgiving (Pss 57:8-9; 71:22; 98:5-6). To what extent the congregation joined in the singing activity of the choir we cannot say, but it is quite likely that congregational participation grew with the development of the temple liturgy.

Study Questions

1. Calvin referred to the psalmists as prophets. Although the book of Psalms is not included in the Hebrew division of the Prophets, how is his assessment accurate?
2. Comment on the literary links between David's poetry outside the Psalms and the poetry within. How does this speak to the issue of David's authorship?
3. Even by the time of the LXX, the logical connection between the titles and content of many psalms had become obscure. What might this suggest about the antiquity of the titles? And content?
4. Read the thirteen historical titles of the psalms along with their historical texts in 1 and 2 Samuel. Comment on the realism this adds to the traditional association of David with the psalms.
5. Familiarize yourself with the musical terms and names of the musical tunes and then read the content of those psalms. What does this awareness of titles add to a reading of the text?
6. What are the three general classes of instruments mentioned in the Psalms, and what are the individual instruments in each class?