Acts 17:27–28—Paul Quotes the Pagans

In Acts 17, Paul quotes from two pagan poets and philosophers when addressing an audience in front of the Areopagus in Athens:

[God] is not far from each one of us. For “In him we live and move and have our being”; as even some of your own poets have said,

“For we too are his offspring.” (Acts 17:27–28)

First Quote: “In him we live and move and have our being”

No text containing these words has survived from antiquity, but Clement of Alexandria, John Chrysostom, and other authorities attributed the line to Epimenides, a seventh- or sixth-century-BCE philosopher-poet

In the early twentieth century, a ninth-century Syriac commentary on the book of Acts was discovered that contained the full quote from the text of Epimenides, which apparently was available to the author of that work at that time. The context seems to be an error (or “lie”) on the part of Cretans who, by building a tomb for Zeus, failed to recognize that the god was immortal

They fashioned a tomb for you, holy and high one,
Cretans, always liars, evil beasts, idle bellies.
But you are not dead: you live and abide forever,
For in you we live and move and have our being.

Of special note is the fact that this one stanza of ancient poetry is actually quoted twice in the New Testament. Paul cites the concluding line in Acts

17:28, while Paul's letter to Titus alludes to the second line in a completely different context:

It was one of them, their very own prophets, who said,

“Cretans are always liars, vicious brutes, lazy gluttons.” (Titus 1:12)

Second Quote: “We too are his offspring”

Paul indicates that this line is something that more than one Greek poet has said, and we do possess two texts that contain similar lines:

All the streets and all the market places of humanity are full of Zeus.

Also full of him are the sea and the harbors,
and everywhere we all have need of Zeus.

For we are also his offspring.

—Aratus of Soli in Cilicia, Phaenomena 2–5¹

The beginning of the world was from you,
and with law you rule over all things.

To you all flesh may speak,
for we are your offspring.

Therefore I will lift a hymn to you and will sing of your power.

—Cleanthes, Fragment 537, “Hymn to Zeus”²

Both Aratus and Cleanthes were Stoic philosophers, fourth to third centuries BCE.
